WIFE ADMITS SHE SAID ARMSTRONG WAS AN "IDIOT"

Mrs. Stella Armstrong of Brookline, being sued for divorce because, as her husband said, he wanted to safeguard his life, health and business.

Mrs. Stella Armstrong of Brookline, whose husband, Nelson A. Armstrong, claims she treated him as cruelly that he was forced to seek divorce to save his health, life and business and to get away from her "madness," told her side of the story to Judge Wait today. She said she was the abused party, adding:

"I called him 'fool' and 'idiot' at times, he got me so angry when he drank and played cards and refused to tell me where he went. I may have shown temper at times and become excited, because I'm hysterical, naturally. There was a revolver in the bureau drawer, but I never threatened to use it on him.

"We had rooms at the Napoli at Nantasket because my cousin is proprietor and we were his guests, but Mr. Armstrong seldom used his room. He preferred one night to hire a room at the Hotel Rockland instead of coming to the own room, or at least preferred he stayed there.

"Another time he told me he was going to spend the night in the Elks club at Springfield, but when I told him I learned the building was being torn down and he wasn't at any of the Springfield hotels.

"Attorney—Did your husband look himself in a room at Brookline?" A—He did.

Q—Did you call him out? A—I did.

Q—What for? A—Because I wanted to.

Q—How long was he locked in? A—About ten minutes.

Q—Do you drink, Mrs. Armstrong? A—I have a little.

Q—What? A—A cocktail.

Q—Any whiskey? A—Only for medicinal purposes.

Q—Did your husband have to undress you and put you to bed? A—He did not.

Q—Did you scream? A—I may have.

Q—Why? A—Well, I'm hysterical and cried a great deal. He threatened to use it on him.

FIGHT ITALIANS WITH FOREST FIRE

By HENRY W. HALL, Special Correspondent of the International News Service.

ROME, June 15.—There is a great deal of fighting going on in Italy with their fire arms. The Italian army is fighting the Austrians in the north of Italy, and the Austrians are fighting the Italians in the south of Italy.

You Can Make Your Hauling Pay With Trucks

The reason for Garford success is this: Garford trucks are built in sizes ranging from 3 1/2 ton to 6 tons capacity. Each model is built for greatest strength and most consistent service in its particular field. Its design and construction has been dictated by a decade of experience—not nebulous theories.

Garford trucks are economically used in over 200 distinct lines of trade in all parts of the country. We have studied the conditions under which they operate and analyzed the results.

Our service to you is based on this experience. The Garford line is so complete that we do not have to sell you a truck which almost fits your hauling needs—we have the truck which will do your work.

Let us prove it.

Mr. Morgan and Mr. "Cutter" as many times as they had opportunity, without the power seeming to be shared. Mr. Morgan a particle. Hitherto Mr. Morgan has been opposed to newspaper photographs in general, but this argument was closed at everything and everybody on his wedding day, that neither photographers nor anybody else could worry him.

The fact that a misty drizzle was falling didn't even lessen Mr. Man's good humor. Just before stepping into the church he brushed a few drops of water from his lapels and shoulders.

It was 11:50 when Mr. Morgan arrived at the church, good and early. The arrival of the bride was timed more closely to the bridal hour. She came to the church at five minutes before twelve, in the Converse limousine, with all the curtains down.

The limousine stopped at the sidewalk end of the awning which had been erected from the front door of the church to the walk.

The bridal was truly exclusive, for, despite the social prominence of the families, the number of invitations was limited to 300.

That limit of 386, however, on the wedding invitations meant much pruning down among the elite of Boston and Brooklyn. For these were the people from New York and other cities to be counted of course, in addition to the Provincials.

The Morgans, Converses, Tudors and other families immediately concerned, with their principal connections, were there as a matter of course. There were many young people present, society or college intimates of the bride.

MAYOR URGES A COMPROMISE PLAN FOR BETTER STREETS

The City Council, after hearing Mayor Currier's plan for a compromise plan for better streets, postponed a final action on the matter for two weeks.

Mayor Currier has paved the way for a compromise suggestion by stating that he will accept any plan that will improve the streets without burdening the city with a large debt.

The City Council is in the process of considering the Mayor's plan. The Council is divided on the issue, with some members favoring the Mayor's plan and others favoring a more radical plan.

PUBLIC EXPECTS ACTION.

The public expects action. They are tired of the current plan and want to see a compromise plan adopted. The Mayor's plan is seen as a way to get the streets improved without a large debt.

The Council is expected to act on the matter soon. The Mayor is hopeful that a compromise plan will be adopted.

"THE GODDESS"

By GOUVERNEUR MORRIS and CHARLES W. GODDARD

By Gouverneur Morris and Charles W. Goddard

Copyright, 1915, by the New York Times

"I WANT you?" exclaimed Tommy, "that I'll promise anything. Will you marry me?"

"I don't know, Tommy dear," she said.

He drew a long breath, rose and walked to the window.

"I think not," said Celestia, and then noting the really trade expression upon the young man's face, she added, "But sometimes I think I'd like to."

It had been found necessary to install a telephone in the Douglas house, on account of the swiftly spreading range of Celestia's engagements.

This was now heard ringing and a moment later Freddie the Ferret interrupted them to say that some one wanted to speak with Mr. Barclay.

Tommy returned from the telephone looking still more dejected.

"I expected to stay all afternoon," he said, "and help you with your mail, but it seems that my father wants to see me very urgently and I suppose I've got to go."

"Of course you have," said Celestia cheerfully.

"Freddie," said Tommy, "I selected to hang up the receiver, will you do it?"

It was sometimes hard to get rid of Freddie.

When the Ferret had come out Tommy made one last appeal to Celestia, going very close to her and speaking softly in a low voice.

"She heard him out gravely, and at the end of his impassioned pleading shook her head still more gravely.

"When I know what is right for me to do," she said, "then I'll tell you. And what I tell you will be final. There are some debts that people have no right to pay. Perhaps my life, which I owe to you, is such a debt. I don't know.

"But I know this, that if you want to go on seeing me, you mustn't make love to me any more. It makes it so much harder for me to think clearly. Some morning I shall wake up knowing what I ought to do, and if I wake up knowing that I ought not to marry you, then, of course, I won't."

Tears gathered in her eyes, and she added, "Even though it broke my heart. Now go."

"May I come back when I've seen my father?"

"If you'll be good, Tommy."

So Tommy promised, very elaborately and at length, to be good, and in the act of promising broke his promise several times and hurried to see his father.

In spite of their recent differences of opinion, and Barclay's long series of disappointments in Tommy, they met with perfect friendliness, and as if there had never been any trouble between them.

Barclay opened the conversation with a laudatory reference to the Douglas fire.

"I used to look for your name on the sporting page of my newspaper," he said, "but now I have to turn to the accounts of socialist meetings and of fires. Was it as close a shave as the paper made out?"

"It certainly was," said Tommy, "it wasn't just twice over; it was five times over, and I didn't think my beard would ever grow again."

"How did the famous Celestia behave?"

"Like a brick, except when she faltered after setting all the other girls out."

Celestia and Tommy in the wreath donated by the grateful girls she saved from death

They were off at last. The clocks were commencing to chime the half hour.

Brooke drove carefully for a time, and unnecessarily slowly, as Crowley thought. But Brooke was aware of the importance of what he was doing. Nothing must go wrong and the streets were very slippery over the river into traffic; then the country and darkness.

The car was early upon the road, and then they shared monosyllables. The great car flew through the night like a thing of life. The keen air that rushed past him and filled his lungs had a very beneficial effect upon Crowley's nerves. It cooled him and cleared his brain. He was able to force from his mind the horror of the position and the dark dead upon which he was bent.

It was nearly half past twelve as they were running over a lonely part of the park-like flatter road. Brooke suddenly slowed down.

"What's that?" asked Crowley.

"Anything wrong?"

"No, I don't want to go through Guilford. We must make a detour. There are some houses to come and all beside me. I shall give her some relief. She's been waiting for me. I don't want to wait after me. Norris expects me."

To make night on earth as bright as day there would have to be over 500,000 moons in the sky.

"I am very interested in seeing her," said Barclay, "and to hear her speak."

Mr. Barclay paused; then he said: "By way, talking of seeing your exploit in print, I noticed a picture of you and the young lady in the papers, sitting in the centre of a wreath."

"Yes," said Tommy, blushing a little. "The girls in the factory insisted on giving it to Celestia to show their gratitude for saving them."

"Well," the elder man continued, "a friend of mine heard her speak to the Shriners' Union after the fire, and came away talking like a lunatic. How does she impress you?"

"Like a girl," said Tommy, blushing a little. "The girls in the factory insisted on giving it to Celestia to show their gratitude for saving them."

TO MY THREE LOVES

Y OU ask me why I never make a little verse for you. You say, perhaps, I should to tell the world our love is true.

Quite honest and true blood. I'd proudly tell the whole wide world; I think I would even brag.

It would at least if it were versed in looking thru my eyes. (My very loving eyes.)

Of course, there's hardly need for lines to show what all can see. Suppose I make a verse for you, and you grow averse to me!

THE EASIEST WAY

To settle most of the burning questions of the day is to wait until they go up in smoke.

To deal with a blooming idiot is to nip him in the bud.

To make sure that your advice is appreciated is to wait until it is asked for and then charge money for it.

To be satisfactory to most people is not to be too well satisfied with yourself.

To keep from doing worse is to let bad enough alone.

To get what you want is to pray for it and work for it at the same time.

To grow weeds is to leave room for them, and by the same token all you need to cultivate a grudge is to give it space in your imagination.

To get bareheaded is not to have any good things under a hat.

JUST about now they're made of bathing caps. Caps for use in bathing. Down in the far Southwest where the Pacific is as blue as the water your mother rinsed her snowy clothes in, with a few of warm velvet in, or green, or amber, or white. It has a piece that runs down like a cord and ties under the chin with cords ended with a button.

There's a pirate cap—used up to show a strip of another cap beneath. There's a cap like those of Normandy wear with a broad band of varied material running all round and a puffy crown rising out of it. There are also garters—the crown is shaped in the cutting of it.

There's, too, there's the bathing cap.

Boston American Editorial Columns

A Legislature "Not Really Dishonest, but Merely Stupid"

The Boston Advertiser has been a strong conservative Republican paper for years. What it says concerning a Republican Legislature must be taken in the nature of a confession and not of a hostile attack.

The AMERICAN repeats in this column a remarkable editorial from such a conservative paper upon the Republican Legislature of Massachusetts this year. The AMERICAN warned the voters of Massachusetts during the last campaign that the Republican party was still unregenerate; that it was more reactionary than ever. Mr. Charles Sumner Bird accurately described the Republican convention when he said that the poem of that gathering ought to have been "Hail! Hail! the gang's come back." The prophetic character of this statement is written large in the record of this year's Legislature, which the staid Republican controlled absolutely and which did its work in typical old-fashioned stolid Republican style. The Advertiser says:

A SAD RECORD

On the very day that the Massachusetts Legislature had been expected to end its session, an apologist for that body, while conceding with some reluctance its bad public odor, claimed in print that at least this could be said about it—that in its whole record of legislation there had been no suspicion of wrong influence of money in its decisions. The members of the Legislature had been (insane folly to that one shred of reputation, and now that, too, is gone.

The story of the remarkable amendments to the New Haven bills brought forward at the last moment, and planned to be passed in the hurry and flurry of the closing hours of the Legislature, seems to be one of mystery. The trick was too old and stale to be successful. At the house held by the Governor at the State House, this week, nobody seemed to be able to explain the source of these amendments. The officials of the New Haven road stated that they had not proposed the amendments, although naturally they would not object if the State saw fit to adopt them. Their statement was confirmed emphatically by the Governor, who also had plenty of proof that the amendments did not originate with the Public Service Commission, nor with Mr. Anderson, the United States district attorney, who on aly has aided both the State board and the committee in preparing a fair and reasonable bill. Even the members of the committee seemed at a loss to explain very definitely how these amendments had crept in.

The only explanation that can be offered is that somehow, possibly while most of the committee members were asleep, the "jokers" in the bill materialized out of the circumambient air, or that they floated down from the ceiling like the letters from the Yogi.

The New Baggage Rule

The new regulations for the valuation of a passenger's baggage furnish a striking illustration of the really super-natural skill which American railroad managers manifest in their effort to impose the maximum annoyance on their patrons to secure the minimum advantage for themselves.

For years there has been uncertainty as to the extent of a railroad's liability for loss of baggage. The roads strove to limit it artificially to $100, but the courts quite generally held that a passenger could recover the amount of his actual loss. With the aid of Senator Cummins of Iowa—who ought to have known better—the roads secured a law authorizing them to tax a passenger 10 cents on every $100 of valuation above the first $100 he puts upon his baggage.

Enforcement of this law is begun. Every passenger is forced to put a value upon his trunks and register in writing that value, with his name and address. What will happen at the checking counters on rush days is easy to foresee.

The railroads may find a small profit in the additional sums paid by travelers for baggage insurance and by escaping responsibility for the loss of valuable baggage not insured. They will, however, have to hire much additional help, and will encounter the opposition of an irritated public which will feel itself imposed upon. The latter consideration, however, appeals to but few railroad managers.

The public in turn will find a new tax added to the cost of railroad service. In many cases the trunk alone, without its contents, is worth the $100 for which liability is admitted. On a short trip, to a suburban town for instance, the charge for safeguarding baggage may easily exceed the actual fare.

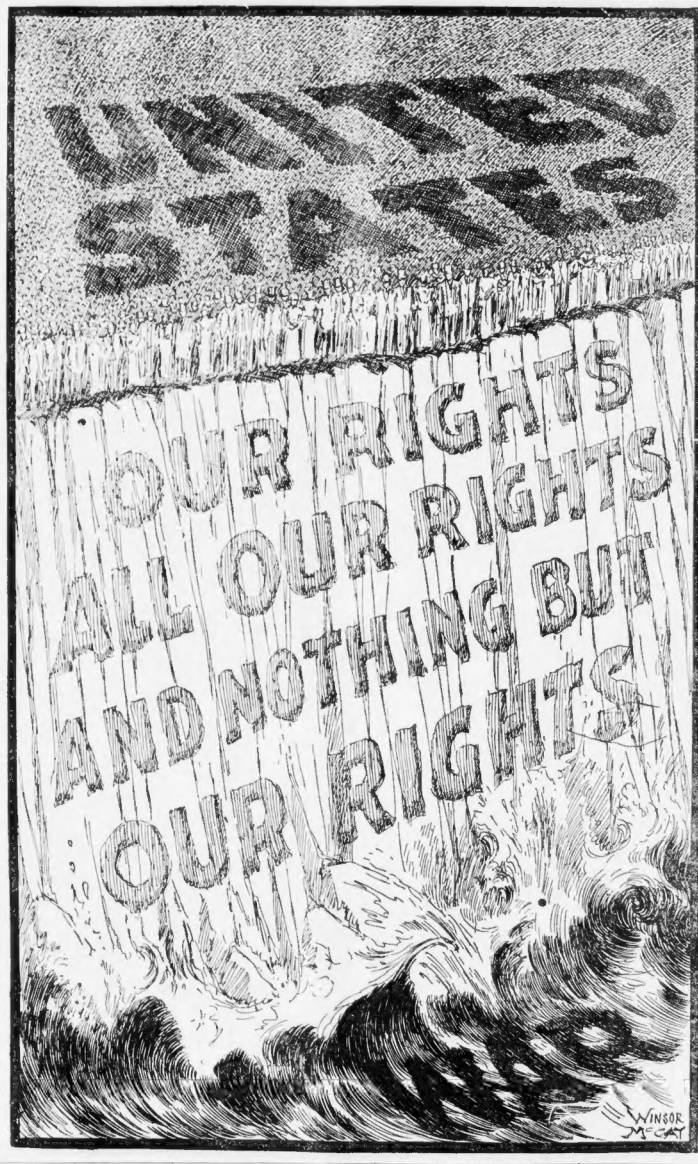

Yet railroad managers complain of public hostility in the roads, and expressed amazement that anybody could hope for better results from government ownership and operation than from the present system!

Class discrimination being opposed to the spirit of our free institutions, why should the postoffice bar turtles and snails? A turtle doesn't go around buzzing like a fool bee, but let our politicians beware the silent vote. If bees may travel by parcel post, turtles will demand the same right, and who shall gainsay them?

Must Give Love to Win Love

People Who Receive Greatest and Most Lasting
Admiration Are Those Who Offer Own Affections
Most Spontaneously, Says Ella Wheeler Wilcox

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

BEHOLD the earth, swung in among the stars—
Fit home for gods, if men
were only kind!

Do thou thy part to shape it to those ends
By shaping thine own life to perfectness.

Seek nothing for thyself or thine
own kin
That robs another of one hope or joy

Let no man toll in poverty and pain
To give thee unearned luxury and ease;

Feed not the hungry servant with stones,
That idle guests may fatten on thy bread.

Look for the good in stranger and
in foe,
Nor save thy praises for the cherished few;

And let the weakest sinner find in thee
An impetus to reach receding
heights.

Behold the earth swung in among the stars—
Fit home for gods! Wake thou
the God within.

And by the broad expanse of thy
love
Communicate Omnipotence to men,
All men are unawakened gods; be thine

The voice to rouse them from unhappy sleep.

OUR power of awakening love and admiration in others depends mainly on our capacity for giving love and admiration.

A beautiful young woman who is merely physically beautiful, like a picture or a gem or an animal, may win love and admiration for a time without feeling anything but self
love.

But her reign will be a short
one.

The human being is so constituted that he will not continue to worship at an altar of ice.

Indifference and coldness may attract a man who loves the conquest of difficulties, but after his conquest is made he ceases to find coldness and indifference attractive qualities.

The people who receive the greatest and most lasting love and admiration in life are those who give most spontaneously of their own affections.

Buddha and Christ loved all humanity with an overwhelming
and self-forgetting love and devotion.

However, his immediate circle mattered Christ. He has been receiving for almost two thousand years the harvest of love which he planted while on earth.

Buddha is worshipped by millions of souls today, after almost three thousand years.

His father, who was a great ruler in India, and his friends and relatives felt heartbroken when the young prince was so impressed with the sufferings of humanity that he went away into the desert to meditate and find a way to help the world. And when he came back and told them that he had learned the whole secret of life,
and that it was to love all created things and do no evil, and return kindness for unkindness, and to treat every living thing as if it were our kin, they marvelled at his word—just as six hundred years later the world marvelled at the same beautiful teachings of Christ.

But now from millions of hearts
rises an income of love at the mention of His name. Love bestowed even upon the unworthy, some time and some way, comes back to the heart which sends it out with tenfold interest, from worthy souls.

We of lesser development can make people love and admire us when we reach that state of selfless wisdom which does not allow us to seek for love or admiration,
and only permits us to receive it when given as a tribute to the qualities which arouse it, and not as a tribute to our individual selves.

Our most vindictive enemy will,
in his secret soul, be forced into admiration of our worth if he sees us going serenely along life's way, doing what good we can and performing our duties with patient understanding.

As the material success of a course of conduct he will see us growing mentally, spiritually, and he will be forced into admiration in spite of himself.

If we are hated and despised for mean and despicable qualities we can only receive love and admiration by overcoming the despicable and achieving noble qualities.

A deliberate course of action,
planned out in cold blood, to win
an enemy as a friend, just to prove that we can, or for personal motives, would bring no lasting result, and would be laying a foundation for more enmity and less respect in the end, because it would not have the foundation of self-respect.

The best way to win your enemy
to love and admiration is to forget all about him, save to commend him to the Great Source of Love and Wisdom, and to ask that light may be given him to see. Then go about your own business serenely;

if it comes in your way to do him
a favor or to save him from misfortune, bestow what help you can;
otherwise leave him to the working out of his destiny while you work out your own.

Sometimes two very excellent individuals, each doing his duty clearly as he sees it, are uncongenial, and if closely associated they become antagonistic. This is because they are vibrating at different rates of speed.

Every vibration of light has its own particular tone and color, and if you are in the sharps, and your color is a bright red, and your associate is in the flats, and of a deep yellow, there will be a clash
of sounds and hues naturally.

The best way in such cases is to let sufficient space intervene, so long as the harmony is not aggressive, until you both come into the universal vibration and color of spiritual perfection.

We are all on the way, and he who has most tolerance for his fellows and he who best minds his own affairs will suffer least because of his neighbor's lack of love and admiration.

The Will of Woman

By Chester Firkins

WHEN any woman will she will,
And when she won't she
won't!

She'll almost rather pay a bill
Than heed a "do" or "don't!"

Such strength of character is great.
All kids it should be taught to;
When lovely woman will she will,
And when she won't she ought to.

WHEN any woman won't she
won't!

And when she will she will:
Decision is her middle name;
She's firm as any bill.

If men would only take from her Their precepts — but they wouldn't!
For when sweet woman won't she
won't!
And when she will she shouldn't.
